

Justice for victims and reconciliation in Basque Country

Reyes Mate

CSIC Research Professor at the Institute of Philosophy

We are witnessing a new phenomenon of global significance, which will condition the response policy in the Basque question. That is why the political response to the "ceasefire permanent "(April 2006) must be different from that which had given F. Gonzalez and J. M. Aznar frustrated truces in 1988 and 1998. Try to use some of the victims politically and rhetorically refer to them should not obscure that no speech credible than the silence. It should be taken into account, although the problem is how to understand its meaning. We can accept that they must repair and even a recognition but should not interfere in the solution of political problems that gave rise to the violence (or the sovereign territoriality): this is a matter of exclusive parties politicians representing the will of citizens. We can also understand the law the victims as the center of gravity of the political solution to these political issues, and that it is a new policy. There is, therefore, clarify what it means to the memory of victims. The first thing must be said is that it is definitely not what you think politically, but the fact be a victim: she is the objective way to understand the policy by the victimizer. Being a victim of the political idea disqualifies victimizer as he expresses violently. Secondly, memory of the victims is an affirmation of injustice done to the victim that is current and not be overlooked.